Dreams of Flame

blog by Peter Collins

I went to the cinema at the weekend to see the sci-fi film Dreams of Flame. I love sci-fi and everybody said it was a great film. I also wanted to see it because my favourite actor, Russell Price, played the main male role. However, the main character, the Evil Warrior, didn't suit Russell at all. He just wasn't the right person to play the character, I think. Kym Finn played the main female character, the Black Commander. She was great in other sci-fi films but unfortunately not in this one. As for the plot, it wasn't interesting, and after twenty minutes I could tell what would happen next. But at least I enjoyed the soundtrack. Without the amazing songs and lovely melodies, Dreams of Flame would be the most boring sci-fi I've ever seen. And although most viewers found the ending funny, I didn't. It didn't fit this particular film at all and it spoiled it even more than the boring plot.

Dorsey Lighthouse

For more than 200 years, Dorsey Lighthouse, a 34-metre-high stone tower, has stood on the west coast of Scotland to guide ships in the Irish Sea. A lighthouse keeper used to live there to take care of the system of lamps which warned sailors of the rough cliffs. Last year, the lighthouse was out of order for some time because of renovation¹, during which first the roof and then the walls were painted with fresh paint. However, the roof is still green and the walls are still white like before. What's more, the way of operating the lighthouse changed and the lighthouse keeper had to move out as modern technology was installed to do his job. Because of the modern technology visitors are not allowed inside the lighthouse now. Despite this, guests from a nearby hotel complex often come to the viewing point next to Dorsey Lighthouse to enjoy the amazing view of the Irish Sea.

Sandrine Sellies, a French passenger, was travelling from France to Australia via Hong Kong for a three-week holiday. Before the flight from Hong Kong to Brisbane, she drank alcohol and took sleeping pills to relax. Soon after the plane took off, she was seen walking with a packet of cigarettes and a lighter. She then kept trying to open the emergency exit so that she could smoke a cigarette. Fortunately, before Sandrine could do that, she was stopped by a cabin crew member who thought she was drunk. As soon as they landed in Brisbane, Sandrine was arrested. According to her lawyer, Sandrine has serious problems with walking in her sleep, and although she didn't remember the incident, she admitted that her behaviour had been dangerous for everybody on the plane. In the end, it was decided that Sandrine would have to pay $1,000, but only if she acted against the law again.

Boomeroo

Julia Heckathorn takes care of lonely animals. She often gives talks at schools, too. To make her talks more attractive, she brings the animals which she has adopted with her to schools. Two years ago she came with a three-week-old kangaroo which she named Boomeroo because a male kangaroo is called a boomer in the language of the Aborigines. Now, Boomeroo has its own heated house in Julia's garden and a special hobby. It sometimes manages to get secretly inside Julia's house and you wouldn't believe what it loves to do there. It goes into Julia's wardrobe and puts on her T-shirts. What's more, when Boomeroo wears them, it produces excited sounds which wild kangaroos make when they smell their mothers in the wild. However, it always keeps quiet when Julia is around.

28 What can we find out about Boomeroo from the text?

- A) It is three weeks old now.
- B) It likes putting on Julia's clothes.
- C) It stays only inside Julia's house.
- D) It makes sounds when it sees Julia.

106-year-old Cyclist

In 2014, Jens Voight, a 43-year-old professional cyclist, broke the world one-hour cycling record by riding a distance of 51.1 km in an hour. After setting the record, Voight said it was nothing compared to what Robert Marchand, a French cyclist, achieved in the same year. Marchand competes in the category of seniors over 100 years old, and just a few days before Voight rode his amazing 51.1 km, Marchand improved the world one-hour cycling record in his category by riding a distance of 26.9 km. This is almost 3 km further than his world one-hour cycling record from the previous year, which was 24.3 km. After setting the record in 2014, Marchand said that he could have done better. 'If I rode 30 km, they'd say I'd been doping!' he laughed. Robert Marchand, now 106, may not be the fastest cyclist, but he is certainly one of the oldest.

The London Institute Film Festival 2019

10 October – 21 October in London cinemas

» A little bit of history

In 1952, two British film directors, Chris Winter and Ben Knightwick, complained to journalists that London didn't organise any film festivals. So a couple of journalists decided to organise one and asked the London Institute to help. The London Institute couldn't help with organising a festival but it did help them financially. The very next year, the journalists opened the London Institute Film Festival – the first film festival in London. The name Knightwick might seem familiar. It's because Ben Knightwick's grandson is the president of the London Institute today. He is known for supporting film directors because he once dreamt of becoming one himself. But before he could make this dream come true, he got a full-time job in the London Institute. Although we're sure he would be a great film director, we are lucky he's stayed with the Institute. He's a great president.

» The films

In 2019, you will get a chance to see as many as 243 films, which is the most the festival has ever offered to its audience. The films will compete in the usual competition categories. Like every year the winner of the Best Newcomer category will receive an award like the winners of the other four competition categories. But what's new this year is that the winner of this category will also be given £20,000 from the London Institute as an extra prize.

» The awards

In 2019, the winners will be given a 30-cm tall statue as an award. Riitta Saiso, who was asked to design the award, made it as a statue of a famous Danish cameraman who invented a special film camera. Although we can't imagine him without a camera in his hands, Riitta Saiso's statue is missing it for practical reasons.

Let's hope one of the awards goes to British film-makers again! Did you know that the first British winner was Harry Rogers? In 1979, he was expected to win the Best Documentary Award. But in the end, an unknown American director beat him. Rogers didn't give up, entered the competition again a year later and became the first British film-maker ever to win at the London Institute Film Festival.

» Tickets

Tickets can be ordered via the festival website. You can pick them up at any box office at any cinema showing the festival films. Please note that the box offices themselves do not sell tickets to this event so don't forget to pay for them online.

Other programmes

Meet&Ask Sessions

Come to Mayfair Cinema on Oct 15th, 17th or 18th at 8pm to chat with the competing film-makers. Anybody is welcome for as long as there are free seats. The limit is 150 visitors a day. No need to pay for a ticket to enter the cinema. These sessions are very popular and since 2010 all seats have been taken on all three dates. So this year we are expecting 450 film fans again. When the festival is over, don't forget to return to Mayfair Cinema to see the pictures taken during the sessions! You might even find yourself in the pictures shown in the photo exhibition!

See&Try Sessions

Come to Soho Film Studios on Oct 13th, 14th or 20th from 10am to 8pm to try to make a short film with the help of professionals. You can even leave with the film you made on a DVD after paying £10 for it. We don't charge any money for entry. These sessions will take place for the second time in the history of the festival. Last year as many as 450 people were expected altogether but in the end, the number was much higher. Again, all photos from the sessions will be shown at a photo exhibition in Mayfair Cinema. So make sure you get there to see them!

We Travel The World

It was late 2014 when our lives changed forever. Until then, my husband and I had lived a life that most people would like to live. We were both working in the Toronto film industry, had been happily married for 10 years and owned a beautiful house. Although our lives in the entertainment industry looked perfect, we didn't have time for anything else but work. We just lived to work.

The feeling that our lives were not what they could be first came in 2014 when we went to Thailand on our first holiday together. When we came back, we started thinking about working less and travelling more but we didn't have exact plans yet. Then one day later that year, after a long day at work, we switched on the TV and a documentary about a marathon runner was on. He had changed from a lazy guy to an extreme athlete. We asked ourselves: If he could do something extreme like that, why not us? Before the documentary was over, we knew we wanted to sell our house, say goodbye to our careers and spend our time travelling instead. Several weeks later, we landed in Cairo with two huge backpacks. They were the first things we bought with the money we got from selling our house. So there we were, in Cairo, ready to start the adventure of a lifetime.

After some time on the road, we started making videos about our new way of life. We didn't intend to make money from the videos, we kept posting them online because we hoped we would become motivation for others. Because we wanted as many people as possible to see the videos, we decided to make an advertisement on TV. We chose Sydney TV studios to do that since we knew some people in the Australian entertainment industry. The advert worked and soon we got over 500,000 viewers. They watched us visit famous places around the world and some actually started their own journeys around the world, while others asked us for advice via social media. Soon we became a well-known travelling couple although that was not why we were making the videos.

During the first year of our journey we visited most of the world's biggest cities. We had a great time sightseeing but we also experienced some dangerous situations in crowded popular tourist sites in Caracas and Rio de Janeiro. So to avoid any dangerous destinations in the second year on the road, our plan was to continue off the beaten track. That's why we chose places where few tourists go. We decided to stay in South America and hike through the countryside of Uruguay and Paraguay, two of the safest South American countries. We walked 1500 km using the information in the guidebook we'd taken with us. We rarely saw a road or a railway on our journey but when we did, we stopped a car for a ride or got on a train.

We travel the world – and it's a dream to be doing this together. For this dream, we gave up our house and successful careers – these aren't easy things to give up. But we have never regretted doing it although I miss my bed sometimes, especially after many nights in a tent. Over the years we also lost contact with many friends from home. We've made wonderful new friendships around the world but we still regret losing contact with those at home. And although we began travelling late in our lives, we've never felt sorry for not travelling the world sooner.

So this is what we do now and we're happy. We hope we have more opportunities to share our experiences with the readers about the way we live.
